ANNEX A - Canada Service Veteran

A. History

Canada Service Veteran

On April 1, 1989, Veterans Independence Program benefits were extended to Canadian Veterans who served in Canada only (see SOR/89-157). A Canada Service Veteran was/is defined as a Veteran of World War I or World War II who:

- a. served on full-time active service, other than service in a theatre of actual war as a member of the Canadian forces or similar forces established in Newfoundland and Labrador;
- b. 65 years of age or more; and
- c. satisfied the income criteria to be recognized as an income-qualified Veteran.

At that time, Treatment Benefits eligibility was also extended to Canada Service Veterans, once they were determined eligible for any of the Veterans Independence Program services.

On January 1, 1995, Canada Service Veterans were extended access to Veterans Independence Program benefits based on the exceptional health needs provision contained in Section 18 of the Veterans Health Care Regulations (see SOR/94-791).

On April 26, 2001, the definition of a Canada Service Veteran was expanded to include Canadian Merchant Mariners, excluding Merchant Navy Veterans, who served for a minimum of 365 days during World War I or World War II (see SOR/2001-157). This was done as a result of Bill C-61, wherein the provisions governing Merchant Navy Veterans were transferred from the Merchant Navy Veteran and Civilian War-related Benefits Act to the same Acts that provide benefits to Armed Forces Veterans, namely the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act.

On August 28, 2001, Canada Service Veterans were granted access to chronic care in a community facility, other than a contract bed (see SOR/2001-326). Eligibility for Treatment Benefits once placed in chronic care, as well as access to chronic care based on insufficient income (i.e. Section 22.1 of the Veterans Health Care Regulations), were also extended at that time.

History of Active Service

During the Second World War, the Militia was divided into Active (Permanent Active Militia) and Reserve (Non Permanent Active Militia) units. During wartime, if a person volunteered for service in the Militia, they entered into a contract for a specific period of time. Pursuant to the Militia Act, that person was placed on Active Service anywhere in Canada or beyond, if required. Pursuant to the National Resources Mobilization Act of 1940, the National War Services Regulations were passed on August 27, 1940, for the purpose of calling men out for service during World War II. These men, known as “National Resources Mobilization Act soldiers”, were obligated to serve in Canada only; but, if a National Resources Mobilization Act soldier chose to volunteer, he/she was enrolled in General Services and likely sent overseas. Effective August 1, 1942, the provision limiting National Resources Mobilization Act soldiers to service only within Canada was repealed.

Non Permanent Active Militia

Upon reporting for training and passing the supplemental medical examination, all National Resources Mobilization Act soldiers became members of, and were taken on the strength of, the respective Non Permanent Active Militia Unit for which they received their pay and allowances. A special enrollment form entitled Militia Act - National Resources Mobilization Act was signed.

Service as a National Resources Mobilization Act soldier could have been deemed Active Service pursuant to the Militia Act depending on the reason for the person being called out and the specific nature of the duties. Service in the Non Permanent Active Militia was part-time or temporary in nature. In the early part of the war, the person was able to continue to maintain full-time employment given that the person would normally report for training one or two days a week, or possibly for two week drills in the summer or winter.

In the fall of 1940, in keeping with the provisions of the National Resources Mobilization Act, the Non Permanent Active Militia annual drill and training, as well as the initial 30-day compulsory training period was not considered as Active Service. Upon completion of such training, an individual was allowed to return home.

In early 1941, in accordance with the coming into force of the Reserve Army Special Regulations, individuals were called up for further training (i.e., four months of training). Upon completion of this training, these individuals were sent to coastal duties as NRMA soldiers, and they could not hold down another job. The aforementioned Regulations permitted that any such four-month training period (some situations may have started as early as January 1941, depending on the specific nature) could be counted as Active Service.

On March 16, 1942, the Governor-in-Council ordered that the Active Militia, comprised of Reserve Formations and Units of the Canadian Army, were to drill or train, as required, for such period not exceeding sixty days in each year. Under the conditions laid out, this service was designated as Active Service.

Effective, December 1, 1943, all service under the National Resources Mobilization Act was deemed to be Active Service (P.C. Order 7989, dated October 14, 1943).

B. Determining Service

To confirm that an individual has sufficient full-time active service to meet the minimum 365-day requirement, it is most easily accomplished by examining the departmental individual's file wherein the Statement of War Service Gratuity form is housed. At the time of discharge, a Statement of War Service Gratuity form was completed by the Department of National Defence for every member of the Canadian Armed Forces.

The Statement of War Service Gratuity form contains the following information:

- Name (served under);
- Address (at the time of discharge)
- Service Number
- Final Rank or Rating, and
- Date of Discharge

Section A contains:

- Total Qualifying Service, and
- Number of Days

Section B contains:

- Qualifying Overseas Service

On some occasions, a Medical Board Proceedings form may be found on the Veteran's file. The Medical Board Proceedings form contains the following information:

- Rank
- Regimental Number
- Unit
- Member's Name and Address

- Date and Place of Enlistment or Enrolment
- Date of Birth
- Occupation in Service
- Length of Service
- Whether the service was confined to Canada or performed abroad. (The information on the form dealing with whether the service was confined to Canada or performed abroad is found on page 1 of the form, specifically section 9.)

Both these forms may be found on the applicant's dormant file, Regional Office file or Head Office file, although in some cases the Medical Board Proceedings form may not be present. Either form may contain enough information to confirm qualifying service for Canada Service Veteran purposes.

If the above-mentioned documents are unavailable, or inconclusive in establishing qualifying service; it will be necessary to formally verify the individual's claimed service with the National Archives of Canada. A VAC264 Request for Service Verification should be forwarded to the National Archives of Canada.

NOTE: The 365 days do not have to involve a consecutive period.

Leave

When reviewing individual service records, there will be some situations where the Veteran's period of service was disrupted for various reasons, including:

- a. Leave Without Pay - which was applicable for essential services purposes or compassionate reasons, and was granted during periods between compulsory training and actual call-up for National Resources Mobilization Act service;
- b. Absence Without Pay - which was applicable for individuals undergoing sentence of penal servitude, imprisonment, or any other incarceration in which pay is forfeited.

In all instances the official records will reflect the Leave aspect, and the respective dates involved. The records will also reveal whether such leave was considered Active Service.

NOTE: Time spent on leave is not counted toward fulfilling the 365 day full-time active service period.

C. Calculating Income

Assessment Formula

As per paragraph 2.a)(iii) of this policy, by reference to the War Veterans Allowance Act, the income of the individual must be assessed against income criteria to determine benefit eligibility (verify that the Veteran satisfies the income requirement of an income-qualified Veteran).

To be eligible as a Canada Service Veteran, the income requirement of an income-qualified Veteran must be met, and is measured using the War Veterans Allowance income factor.

In the case of a Canada Service Veteran:

- a. the Veteran does not meet the service requirements of the War Veterans Allowance Act under sections 37(3) and 37(5); and
- b. the Veteran has an assessable income, excluding Old Age Security, that is equal to or less than the applicable War Veterans Allowance income factor for that Veteran's situation. War Veterans Allowance income factors (listed below) may be found in the Schedule to the War Veterans Allowance Act.

The War Veterans Allowance income factor and income calculation for determining if a Canada Service Veteran is income-qualified is not to be misconstrued as establishing eligibility for War Veterans Allowance, even though this calculation uses the same income assessment for those Veterans seeking War Veterans Allowance eligibility. (See Income Assessment – War Veterans Allowance Program policy.)

For the purpose of the Veterans Independence Program, income eligibility is to be determined using the following War Veterans Allowance income factors (as per the Schedule to the War Veterans Allowance Act):

- a. in the case of a single Canada Service Veteran, the single income factor of War Veterans Allowance;
- b. in the case of a Canada Service Veteran married to a non-Veteran, the married income factor of War Veterans Allowance;
- c. in the case of a Canada Service Veteran married to another Canada Service Veteran, double the single income factor of War Veterans Allowance;
- d. in the case of a Canada Service Veteran married to a Veteran who meets the service eligibility requirement of the War Veterans Allowance Act, the same income factor indicated in c) above.

NOTE: In the scenarios described above in c) and d), both Veterans must meet the income qualifications. It is not possible for one Veteran to meet the income qualifications, and the other Veteran to have excess income.

Where there are dependent children involved, the normal War Veterans Allowance rules dealing with dependents apply.

Restriction of Income Assessment for Veterans Independence Program

The required conditions expressed above in Assessment Formula are for use only when determining eligibility for Veterans Independence Program. These are not to be misconstrued as establishing eligibility for War Veterans Allowance which is a distinct and separate process.
